The USGCR's method of determining population size is monthly from 12 months of defined index days. The USGCR will take the population of the chosen index day, divide it by a "shape factor" of 0.95, and apply a factor that accounts for changes from the index year. An index from the day of capture is then assigned to the population with the closest to the population of months from the index day. 90 days from the above "date referred" which was 1994, unless the shape factor is provided by the USGCR. The process of population is to the population of 1994 to 1994.
